The Three Rs of Irish Unity Respect—Reintegration—Referendum

RESPECT

Arrogance and opposition to equality closed the Northern Assembly.

In 2016 Democratic Unionist Party leader Arlene Foster arrogantly refused to allow a transparent investigation into a financial scandal that occurred on her watch and she repeatedly made deliberate displays of disrespect for Irish culture. Such 'crass and crude bigotry', as Martin McGuinness phrased it, could not go unchallenged: in January 2017, he resigned as Deputy First Minister.

Sinn Féin will not return to the Assembly until Unionists embrace the equality, mutual respect, and all-Ireland approaches enshrined in the Good Friday Agreement.

It is time for a reunified Ireland in which there is respect for all.

REINTEGRATION

The Good Friday Agreement created a North-South Ministerial Council, a North-South Interparliamentary Body, and a North-South Consultative Body.

Unionist foot-dragging and British indifference have prevented the Council and the two bodies from realising their potential. Still, peace has seen the reintegration of communities and regions severed by the border.

People routinely cross the border to shop and attend sporting and cultural events.

Cross-border traffic, trade, and tourism have increased. It is time for all-Ireland planning in health, education, transport, and economic development.

REFERENDUM

In the 2017 Assembly elections Unionism lost its majority in a state designed to perpetuate it.

Analysts project that the 2021 census will return a greater number of Catholics than Protestants in the North.

A nationalist electoral majority is imminent.

The Good Friday Agreement includes a provision for a referendum on the reunification of Ireland.

It is time to call that referendum.

WHERE WE STAND

The Brexit crisis has laid bare the injustice of partition. It has exposed the fallacy that Ireland's future matters in Britain. And it has demonstrated that as long as the North is tied to the dysfunction and disinterest of Westminster, Ireland will never achieve its full potential. Reunification is coming. And Unionists know it.

Given the collapse of Unionists' majority in the North, the challenge for their current leaders is to involve themselves with others, not least Republicans, in planning the shape and form that reunification takes.
